Relative to Automobile Apparel and Requisites for Men and Women

APRICIOUS and often unkind is nature. Her elements are a penalty to the pleasure of the autoist. To grant absolute immunity from rain, wind and dust is our business. To augment the garments and requisites which our organization of tailors designs and fashions, we import the cleverest and most authoritative models, the exclusive control of which is invested in us.

¶ O. Strom et Fils of Paris, official tailors to the Automobile Club of Paris, send to us clever French garments of rubber, silk and fabrics.

¶ Oscar Henriques and his associates of Copenhagen, make our leather coats, trousers and skirts of soft Danish kidskin which is uniform in color and extremely serviceable.

¶ Alfred Dunhill of London, the recognized arbiter of automobile fashions, sends to us the tailored garments which find the greatest favor in England.

¶ Since the very advent of the motor car we have made a specialty of everything for the autoist but the auto—everything to insure convenience and comfort is within the province of our business.

¶ In numbers and character, we maintain the most comprehensive and distinctive collection of automobile garments and requisites, which this or any other country affords.

¶ Our prices are modest, the high character of the garments both in fabrics and tailoring considered.

Explanatory

- ¶ We shall be pleased to make to your measure, with modifications or amendments if desired, any of the garments mentioned in this catalogue, without extra charge.
- ¶ All seams of garments designated as waterproof are sewn and cemented, making them impervious to water.
- ¶ The fabric termed single texture "Silk-Rubber" is an excellent quality of silk, the reverse side of which has a coating of pure rubber; double texture Silk-Rubber defines a fabric the obverse and reverse side of which is fine silk with an adhesive interlining of pure rubber.
- ¶ All garments with sleeves have wind cuffs attached on the inside, with elastic at the wrists.
- ¶ Samples of any fabric or fabrics we will be pleased to send upon request.

TERMS.

- ¶ Orders for merchandise to be sent C. O. D. should be accompanied by enough to prepay express charges both ways.
- ¶ When ordering by mail, please to designate article by number and letter in catalogue. Measurement blanks will be furnished upon application.
- ¶ For garments of sizes greater than those mentioned in each specific item, an extra charge will be made from $1.50 to $2.50.
- ¶ With orders for garments to be made to measure a deposit of one-third of the cost is required.

SAKS Model. Probably no other garment of its kind in our entire collection has met with so much favor. In design, it is not alone pleasing to the eye, but extremely serviceable, so far as immunity from the elements is concerned. The coat buttons down the center on a false fly and again at the extreme right. On the shoulder a flap in cape effect fastens to the breast with a button. A ball and socket fastener confines the extreme end of the skirt, which is of generous proportions. The back has a half belt. Three pockets. Length 52 to 56 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

THIS is an extremely serviceable yet inexpensive wet weather garment designed by Strom. The neck fastens with a draw string; the front with buttons. On the inside from the neck half way down, a shield of rubber affords protection against rain, wind and dust. The cuffs are elastic and clasp the wrists snugly but comfortably withal. An exceptionally wide skirt makes the coat which is from 48 to 52 inches long, comfortable under all circumstances. Your chest measure and sleeve length will answer for the size.

NE of Strom's latest models which has a definite purpose as a reason for being—to afford protection to the man and the steering gear of the machine. The yoke is of elastic rubber with a body of waterproof materials. The arm-pits are extremely wide, so that the arms may be withdrawn without unfastening the coat. The skirt of the garment is more than twice the normal width, with an inverted plait on both sides, fastened with snap ball-and-sockets which allow the coat to be worn for general service without evidence of its two-fold purpose. It is 50 to 54 inches long in small, medium and large sizes.

THERE is character to commend this garment. On the boulevards and in the suburbs of Paris, its popularity is thoroughly demonstrated. Strom is its author. The yoke adds breadth to the shoulders, and the strap seams, belt and plaits (on the pockets) lend individuality to the coat. The collar which is of leather to match the cloth, is the conventional notched effect and may be turned up and buttoned in stormy weather. To the most minute detail, the tailoring is of an exceptionally high order. Three pockets, two large and one small. Sizes 34 to 44, length 50 to 56 inches.

THIS coat has been designed for men who cannot find comfort in a garment which extends below the knees. It is a Saks model, double-breasted, with two pockets the flaps of which fasten with buttons. In effect it is quite conservative, though characteristic enough to define the service for which it is fashioned. The tailoring is of that high grade which rarely finds expression in other than to-measure garments. Length 35 to 37 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

WHETHER your enthusiasm inclines you to the motor boat or the automobile, this suit must commend itself to you. While it is designed for service in all manner of weather, it affords absolute protection from even the most violent storm. The coat is a double-breasted sack model with two side and two vertical pockets all of which have buttoned flaps. The cuffs are of medium width, above which there are wide straps of leather so that you may draw the sleeves tight at the wrist when it storms. The trousers are of the conventional sailor pattern with or without cuffs at the bottom. Length of coat 26 to 30 inches, in sizes 34 to 40.

THIS is the time-honored great-coat plus the character that defines the service for which this garment has been designed. It is a greatcoat in more than one sense. The heavy needle-resisting fabric demands all the talent and cleverness of our tailormen, to insure the perfect proportions and the individuality which our standard of tailoring demands of every garment that our label identifies. To grant immunity from the wind and cold the coat buttons twice—once on a false fly underneath and again through the cloth. The back is a loose box effect. So that the garment may not be soiled nor worn at the bottom, the hem is faced on the inside with a broad leather band. Two spacious pockets. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

A GREAT loose garment which promises a full measure of comfort even though the thermometer be at zero. In design the coat has much in common with the conservative Tourist model. The cloth straps from the shoulders to the edge of the skirt on both sides are not without a purpose—it is a knack which our tailors devised to help insure the permanency of the shape, even though subjected to rough service. From the throat to the very edge of the skirt the coat buttons first on an inside fly and again through the cloth as the illustration demonstrates. The deep cuffs and storm collar are of Danish leather; the two vertical pockets have wide shields of it. A Saks model. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

O much interest did this coat excite—especially among the tailormen-at-large—that we found it necessary to protect the design by patents. The back has two full box plaits and half belt which we have borrowed from a new English model. Down the center from the neck to the edge of the skirt the coat buttons on a concealed inside fly and again at the extreme left, as the illustration depicts. From the center of the left shoulder a flap in cape fashion buttons to the breast, thus making a perfect shield from the elements. For the sake of good service the entire edge of the skirt on the inside is bound with a wide leather band. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

THE tailorman's craft all but exhausts its possibilities in the fashioning of this garment which departs radically from the prescribed form of the automobile coat. It is designed for men to whom nature has been kind—men with well developed proportions which the garment will follow faithfully. NEW expression of Strom's ingenuity is this garment which, because of its very simplicity and the full measure of comfort and convenience it insures, promises to find almost universal favor. At the back the vent is from the waist to the end of the coat. The front on both sides is in the form of an "L" which permits the skirt to pass between and around the limbs and button at the calf, thus converting the garment into a short coat and trousers. The straps on the cuffs make it possible to draw them tight at the wrists. Two deep vertical pockets. Throughout the coat is tailored infinitely better than the average ready-for-service garment.  HIS Saks coat is dedicated to a further service than that which the automobile demands—it is distinctive and impressive enough to be worn for the hunting trip, driving and kindred sports which demand the strenuous life that leaves its imprint upon one's garments. The coat is a full fashioned, double-breasted English box model of almost knee length, with a notched collar and wide lapels. The eight large pearl buttons reflect character to the garment. The sleeves are without cuffs. There are five pockets all of which have wide flaps that fasten with pearl buttons. None but a tailorman can fully appreciate to what degree the craftsman's effort is taxed to fashion a coat of heavy corduroy and yet express the style and life that marks this garment. Length 35 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

IF you were to ask us why we invest our faith and invite yours in the Henriques garments, we could not advance a better reason than this coat demonstrates. It is the most inexpensive coat of Danish leather which our stock affords. While the leather is not of the very highest grade, it is infinitely superior to the better class of domestic skins. The very simplicity of the coat defines the true value of the Henriques system of tailoring—defines how faithfully the garment follows the lines and contour of the form without imposing the penalty of discomfort. It is a double-breasted model with two side pockets protected by flaps and a deep storm collar which fits quite high, at the throat. Length 26 to 28 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

UNTIL the advent of the Henriques models, garments of leather found little or no favor—the penalty, uncouthness and discomfort, was too great. The soft, pliable Danish leather allows a freedom of action which the hard, stiff domestic leathers restrain. So that even rain may not penetrate nor affect the texture of the leather, a system of tanning has been devised which leaves it immune. This double-breasted coat, which is one of the most popular models that our stock affords, has stitched cuffs and collar, five pockets, two at the sides and one at the top with flaps, and two vertical pockets with shields. Over a strap of stitched leather on the right breast, the buttons are sewn. The tailoring is of a grade wholly foreign to the coats which are made in this country. THIS garment defines the highest expression of the leather-workers craft. The kidskin is almost as soft as a fabric, but even rough and constant service will scarce leave its imprint. Henriques is at his best in the tailoring of the coat which owes its character and style entirely to his cleverness. Down the center on the left a strap of stitched leather holds the buttons. So that they may not curl, the cuffs and skirt are liberally stitched. The five outside pockets all have wide stitched flaps. The two inside pockets are quite deep. Storm collar. No. 605. Three-Quarter Coat for Men

THE deep yoke on the chest and back is the distinguishing feature of this coat, which Henriques designed. It is a double-breasted box model which, despite its length, is not at all as heavy and cumbersome as are the garments of this character which are fashioned in this country. The body of the coat from the yoke down is designed quite full, making the skirt of greater than usual proportions. The standard which governed the tailoring of this coat demands not alone good service but a full measure of style and that element of character which identifies the highest grade of to-measure garments. Two side and two vertical pockets with stitched flaps and two inside pockets. Length 42 inches, in sizes 36 to 42.

No. 606. Long Coat for Men.

DESPITE its almost extreme length this coat is not at all heavy in weight nor cumbersome in service. Oscar Henriques sends it to us from Copenhagen. Coats of this character which are made in this country are of innumerable pieces of leather sewn together and like the proverbial coat of Jacob, in multi shades of color. The Henriques garments are of whole skins, well tanned and carefully matched in color. The tailoring is infinitely better than that which finds expression in the domestic garments. On the right breast the buttons are sewn on a strap of stitched leather. Double-breasted model with a half belt and an extremely wide storm collar. The garment has three pockets with wide flaps—two at the sides and one at the top. Sizes 34 to 48; length 49 to 53 inches.

GARMENT of this character makes one conscious of the superiority of the Danish system of tanning which leaves the leather light, elastic and full of "life," instead of heavy, soggy and stiff which is characteristic of the American leathers. The coat is tailored to follow the lines of the shoulders and chest; the skirt is the full fashioned bell form of extreme width but not without grace. On the right side a strap of stitched leather is applied upon which the buttons are sewn. The top and two side pockets have stitched flaps; the vertical pockets, shields. The Henriques tailormen devote their entire time and talent to the fashioning of leather garments. The advantage of this persistent application to a given thing is aptly demonstrated in the tailoring and finish of this coat. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 36 to 44.

DECEPTION was never practiced for a better purpose than in the fashioning of this Henriques coat. Its office is two-fold—that of a leather greatcoat and lap robe. On the inside from the waist to the edge of the garment a wide shield of leather is attached, which the tourist needs but button to the left pocket and hip to convert into a robe of generous proportions. So cleverly is it designed that one is never conscious of the presence of the shield until comfort calls it into requisition. The coat itself is a yoke effect with liberally stitched cuffs and skirt. Two vertical outside and two spacious inside pockets. Rest assured that all the talent which Henriques has developed, was of necessity exercised in the tailoring of this extremely serviceable garment. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 36 to 46.

DIVERSITY of models is one of the features which commends our collection of suits for the chauffeur. This suit is an adaptation of a model which a far-famed London tailor conceived. It consists of coat, waistcoat, trousers and breeches. The coat is single-breasted with an eton collar which buttons close to the neck, and four pockets with buttoned flaps. The waistcoat is also single-breasted with four pockets. Full at the hips and shaped at the knees, the breeches are specifically for the auto. The trousers are conventional in form with cuffs at the bottom. The suit is thoroughly well tailored. Length of coat 28 to 30 inches, in sizes 34 to 42.

Explanatory

Relative to Fur Garments

- ¶ So that our label may have a greater significance when it identifies a fur garment, we have our expert furrier to select the pelts in their raw state—select them with a fine sense of discrimination and discernment which insures for a garment a long life even though it be strenuous.
- ¶ Since it has been our specialty from the very advent of the motor car, you may depend upon every garment which we fashion, to embody those principles and knacks which promise a full measure of convenience and protection. The skirt of a Saks coat is almost a fourth greater in width than the average fur garment. The pockets are placed to be of service whether one assumes a standing or sitting position. The edge of every coat at the flaps has a button or two which prevents a gap when one is seated.
- ¶ For those who are not familiar with the nature of the various furs we present the following definitions :
- ¶ Wombat Fur, silver grey or brown, long hair, with a dense under fur and a light, tough hide.
- ¶ Manchuria Dogskin Fur, brown or black, long silky hair, soft serviceable hide.
- ¶ Civet Cat Fur, black spotted with yellow, much like a tiger skin, hair of medium length, with a soft black under fur, light though tough hide.
- ¶ Raccoon Fur, grey, brown or black, long dense hair, with a thick under fur and light hide. The quality is defined by the intensity of color and the density of hair and fur.

- ☞ Australian Opossum Fur, grey, soft fur, of a woolly nature, with a dense under fur, light hide.
- ☞ Hair Seal Fur, silver grey or black, the true seal skin, unplucked; short hair, thick though light hide.
- ☞ Russian Calf Fur, medium or dark brown, dense short hair, tough hide.
- ☞ Russian Pony Fur, medium or dark brown, short dense hair, thin though serviceable hide.
- ☞ Wool Seal, brown, the Labrador Sealskin, combed to curl like wool, dense fur, thick hide.
- ☞ Abyssinia Monkey Fur, black, extremely long hair, with a dense under fur and tough hide of medium thickness.
- ☞ Wildcat Fur, brown with tan spots, much like a tiger skin, hair of medium length, with an under fur; serviceable hide.
- ☞ Muskrat Fur, grey, black, or brown, hair of medium length, with a very dense under fur, thin hide.
- ☞ Unplucked Otter Fur, brown hair of medium length, with a dense under fur and a very tough hide.
- ☞ Squirrel Fur, grey, very dense fur of medium length, with a thin yet strong hide.
- ☞ Beaver Fur, brown, very dense fur, with a thick serviceable hide.
- ☞ Nutria Fur, brown, the under pelt of the beaver, very dense fur, with a thin hide.
- ☞ Persian Lynx Fur, white, long hair, with a dense under fur, and tough hide of medium thickness.
- ☞ Ramo Fur, grey, the pelt of the muskrat, sheared quite close to the hide which is light though tough.

SO that comfort may not be penalized by either weight or cumbersome proportions, we have elected to present this loose, full-fashioned coat of such furs as are best adapted for a garment of this character—furs which are extremely light in weight, with a strong hide to insure good service, and a thick, dense nap which will not only lend its warmth but shed the water as well. It is a double-breasted model with a shawl collar which is deep enough to afford protection for the entire back of the head and ears, when turned up. The sleeves are finished with deep cuffs. There are two vertical pockets. The large bone buttons on the right and left breast extend to the end of the garment. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 38 to 44.

BECAUSE of its distinctive and impressive style which demands the most skilled and patient workmanship for its expression, we are inclined to confine this model to the furs of the higher grade. It is a double-breasted coat, with large bone buttons that extend to the very edge of the garment. It has a deep shawl collar and wide lapels which afford further protection to the chest. The cuffs are deep and thick, much after the manner of muffs in miniature. Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 38 to 44.

TO Strom's ingenuity we owe this model which may be converted from the conventional double-breasted long coat into a short coat and trousers, by an arrangement of buttons which is as simple as it is clever. At the back the coat has a vent from the waist to the end of the skirt. The front on both sides is in the form of an "L," which permits the skirt to pass between and around the limbs and button at the calf, thus converting the garment into a short coat and trousers. The straps at the wrists make it possible to draw them tight for protection from the wind and snow. The shawl collar, which is quite deep, buttons close at the throat. There are two deep vertical pockets. Length 50 to 58 inches, in sizes 38 to 44.

WHEN Strom exercises his cleverness the result is ever worthy of his effort. Conscious of the inconvenience and discomfort which is inflicted upon the autoist who forgets or loses his gloves, Strom has designed this coat with fur mitts attached. They have elastic straps and metal hooks so that the mitts may be drawn tight at the wrists. The shawl collar of generous depth also has an elastic strap and hook with which to draw the collar snugly about the neck so that the throat may be protected. The coat is a double-breasted model which fits the shoulders and chest right well. The skirt graduates below the waist to almost extreme proportions. There are two pockets—one on each side. Length 35 to 40 inches, in sizes 38 to 42.

FUR trousers are comfortable in the auto but more or less cumbersome out of it. This condition gave the inspiration for the trousers with boots attached, which are presented here. It is one of the many Saks models which we have found necessary to protect by patents. But a second is spent to adjust or remove the trousers. At the waist, legs and calves light steel half-hoops as pliable as a watch spring are inserted in a sheath of cloth. They clasp the body and limbs in a firm yet comfortable embrace so that the fur is in the form of a well fitting pair of trousers. Because of the strenuous service to which they are apt to be subjected, the following thick-hide furs have been selected. Three sizes—small, medium and large.

O favorably were we impressed with this model which our designers conceived, that we petitioned for a patent which has been granted. The illustrations clearly convey to the eye the four functions which this cap faithfully answers. Figure one presents a dignified tourist cap which has attached in the back fold, a pair of wide vision goggles cleverly concealed. Figure two shows the hood in service. The visor is flexible and easily turned up into the crown of the cap when the mask and goggles are in service as figure three depicts. From the wind, the snow, the dust and rain does the cap warrant immunity.

PERHAPS this is the cleverest cap ever filed at the patent office. With an arrangement that is simplicity itself, it renders a service which every autoist who has ever left his goggles after him will surely appreciate. A pair of wide vision goggles, light in weight though of a high grade, are ingeniously fastened on a shield of cloth which is sewn to the cap at the forehead. When the goggles are not in service they may be folded into the projecting crown of the cap as the lower illustration shows, which leaves you unconscious of their presence until they are needed. Nor can you readily break or forget them. The hood which protects the ears and head, folds over and fastens on the crown of the cap with snap fasteners.

HILE Strom claims this model to be his design, we have good reasons to believe that Doucet has contributed not a little to its extremely graceful and pleasing form. The half belt at the back holds the series of wide plaits in place; the cuffs, which are of the gauntlet pattern, lend character to the garment; the collar of generous proportions may be turned up in the event of a storm and fastened at the throat with straps of the same material. FOR a long tour and, perhaps, a stormy one, this coat will be of greatest service. The front is designed to prevent the most driving rain from finding an entrance and to avoid the accumulation of water in the lap, even though you are compelled to remain seated for hours. The coat is fastened by a wide band of the material which enters a slit at the left side, passes across the back on the inside, out through a slit on the right and buttons in the back to form a half belt. The model was designed by Strom for general service. Length 54 to 60 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

ITHOUT offending the conventions, one may wear this coat on almost any informal occasion as well as for the automobile. It is a double-breasted top coat model with a wide collar and notched lapels. The back is full box effect, the severity of which is relieved by a half belt. The four pockets have wide stitched flaps of the same material as the garment. Of necessity a coat so wholly devoid of trimming and elaboration as is this, depends upon the tailor's ability and cleverness to infuse an element of dignity and style with which to sue for favor. IN designing this model, which has extreme comfort to commend it, Strom had in mind the discomfort to which the sharp wind subjects the chest of the autoist, and therefore fashioned the coat to button on the side. HIS coat is marked by the influence of the foreign models which is the source of much of its style and snap. It is a double-breasted coat which buttons on a cord edge. On both shoulders there is a strap and two plaits. At the back an inverted plait begins at the collar and extends to the waist, where it is confined by two tabs and a quarter belt. Below the waist the plait unfolds which makes the skirt extremely full and graceful. At the top the sleeves have two horizontal plaits; a wide straps confines the fullness at the wrist, allowing the end of the sleeve to fall over the hand in ruffle fashion. The full belt on the inside serves to draw the garment close at the shoulders and waist. There are two pockets. Length 52 to 60 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

IMPLE dignity, quiet elegance and a forcible individuality commend this Saks garment to the discerning. Instead of concealing the lines and curves of the form the coat follows and defines them. To the upper body it fits perfectly yet without penalty to comfort. To give the skirt the extreme width necessary in a coat for auto service, a wide inverted box plait is inserted at the back. Leather straps—one from the shoulders to the waist and two half way, trim the front of the coat on both sides. The seams at the hips, back and shoulders are all piped with leather. The sleeves are full pouch effect finished with wide cuffs of leather; the two pockets have wide stitched flaps of it. The wide collar is also of leather. Length 53 to 60 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

IN this instance even simplicity has its compensation. Without recourse to elaboration, our designers have conceived a model that is as graceful and impressive as the most costly foreign garments. In many instances the imported coats conceal the lines and curves of the form, instead of defining its contour as does this garment. It is a double-breasted model, the upper body and hips of which follow the lines of the figure faithfully. The extreme width of the skirt has its source in a series of inverted back plaits. The wide collar, narrow cuffs and full belt are of Danish leather, neatly stitched. Under the belt there are two pockets. The broad shoulders and strapped seams and edges all attest to the high character of the tailoring. Length 52 to 56 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

Ofttimes a trip entails a visit to a country home for which milady deems it necessary to wear a more or less elaborate gown. So that there may be no danger of crushing or disarranging it, this coat has been designed. The back has a series of plaits which gather at the waist and fall in full folds to the end of the skirt. For the sake of warmth and comfort the coat is half lined with suede leather. The wide circular collar and full revers are of white suede leather appliqued with grey suede; so are the two straps on the cuffs and the half belt. The new pouch sleeves are finished with wide cuffs of a new design. The two vertical pockets are piped with leather. To the most minute detail the tailoring is of a very high grade. HE determination to earn and maintain his title of arbiter of automobile apparel fashions in England has led Dunhill to extremes in the designing of this coat. The richness of material, intricate and clever method of elaboration and the form of the garment itself give it the distinction of being the most superb and exquisite coat of its character which our collection of imported models affords. The entire garment is made of heavy mohair plush, the pile of which is almost as long and dense as a fur. The cape, sleeves, fly front and shoulders are appliqued with white kid leather out of which diamond shaped panels are cut, so that the plush may show. THE favor which the suits for the motor car have found in Paris has led us to present this model. With perfect propriety it may be worn for boating, camping, golfing and kindred outdoor sports which demand other than conservative apparel. So that neither hard wear nor dust may leave its imprint, we have selected corduroy for the material. The coat is a three-quarter model with notched collar and fly front. In both back and front it is strapped from the shoulders to the edge of the coat. The collar and cuffs are of soft leather in tan. The two pockets have deep flaps of leather. The skirt is a pedestrienne model which fits the hips snugly. From the waist to the knees there is a series of plaits which unfold to give to the bottom of the skirt a generous flare. Even unto the minor details, the Saks standard of tailoring has been exercised. Sizes 34 to 44.

THIS suit is dedicated to the most strenuous service which the outdoor sports can inflict, be it automobiling, camping, golfing or boating. It is a conservative Norfolk model made of corduroy which of all fabrics will withstand the hardest wear and without evidence of it. The coat has two wide box plaits on the front, which extend over the shoulders and down the back. A full belt of stitched leather passes under the plaits at the waist. The deep storm collar and gauntlet cuffs are of tailor-stitched leather. So are the shield flaps over the two side pockets. The skirt is a pedestrienne model with plaits from the waist to the knees, where they unfold, making the bottom of the skirt extremely full in flare effect. No. 5038. Suit for Women.

UR designers present this new model which is to a degree elaborate without transgressing good taste. It is not alone impressive but authoritative as well, since the suit is with a few exceptions a faithful copy of one of Paquin's cleverest models. The short double-breasted box coat has a strap of leather on both sides, which begins at the pocket, extends over the shoulder and down the back. The turn-down collar and cuffs are of leather. The flaps on the two pockets are also of leather. The skirt is a pedestrienne model which instead of passing over the head wraps about the body and fastens with ball-and-socket snaps, of which there is a series down the side of the garment. The hem of the skirt is bound with leather; over the seams there are stitched straps of leather. Half way from the waist two plaits unfold which give to the skirt a proper flare. Sizes 36 to 42.

THIS suit earns milady's favor, since it may be of service for the yacht, motor boat, automobile and perhaps on wet days in camp or at the seashore. Without giving that impression, it is a waterproof suit which will be faithful to the purpose for which it was designed, be the storm ever so severe. The coat is an English box model which you may have to fasten with pearl buttons or ball-and-socket snaps. Instead of the conventional pattern, this skirt has a series of snap fasteners down the entire side which permits you to adjust it en tour quickly and without embarrassment. EVERELY plain yet distinctive is this garment. After the manner of a double-breasted model it buttons on the extreme right so that the front may serve as a shield from the most piercing wind and cold. The coat fits snugly at the shoulders from which it falls rather loosely in full box effect. It is in a simple garment of leather such as this that the Henriques system of tailoring is demonstrated to the best advantage—it insures a certain character and grace, the source of which it is hard to define. The leather is of the highest grade, extremely soft and pliable, but serviceable withal. The two pockets have wide flaps. The cuffs are generously stitched; so is the collar which is the turn-over style. Length 22 to 24 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

HENRIQUES has spent the full power of his craft in the tailoring of this suit. It is of soft Danish Kid leather, extremely pliable and uniform in color. The Norfolk design relieves the severe lines with which leather, no matter how soft, is apt to inflict a garment. The coat which is one of the most effective leather garments that our collection affords, has two wide plaits back and front which begin at the yoke, two pockets with stitched flaps and a full belt. The skirt is of the yoke pattern fashioned to fit the hips snugly and flare at the bottom. It has but one pocket. You may have either coat or skirt separately. FOR the most part, the new English short coats for the motor car are double-breasted effects. This coat is an adaptation (with certain desirable amendments) of one of the most favored of the foreign models. Across the front and back there is a V-shaped yoke which extends over the sleeves much after the manner of chevrons. At the wrists there are straps with ball-and-socket snaps which allow the sleeves to be drawn tight in extremely cold or windy weather. The storm collar has a strap with buttons with which to hold the collar closed at the throat, when turned up. The two pockets have wide stitched flaps. Even unto the most minor detail, the coat is tailored to insure not alone good service but a full measure of character and style as well. Length 24 to 28 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

WITH defined ideas of our own relative to the design of a leather coat, we have fashioned this garment, the Danish leather of which we imported from Henriques. Across the back and front of the coat there is a stitched yoke, from which a series of plaits unfold that give to the body of the garment its extreme yet graceful fullness. The wide kimono sleeves, stitched in fancy designs, are over false half sleeves which begin above the elbows. Instead of buttons, the garment fastens with ball-and-socket snaps. The collar is liberally stitched. The features which contribute to the high character of the garment are these—it is made of entire skins instead of short pieces of leather (a condition which is only too often the fault in a leather garment) and the tailoring, which expresses the full power of the tailor's craft. Length 24 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

NOT willing to confine our models to those which Henriques creates, we have designed a number of coats for which we have imported the soft Danish leathers. This single-breasted garment has a yoke back and front from which the skirt graduates making it of ample proportions. The deep collar has a tab and button attached with which to fasten it when turned up. Gathered at the shoulders the sleeves widen at the elbows and are finished with fancy cuffs which are liberally stitched. At the wrists the sleeves have fancy straps of leather with which they may be drawn tight to exclude the dust and wind. The back of the garment which is in full box effect is generously stitched in fancy designs. There are two pockets with flaps. Length 40 to 46 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

THE entire Henriques collection does not afford a full length leather coat for women. Rather than suffer our series of models to be incomplete, we have designed this single-breasted fly-front coat for which the soft Danish leather was imported. To form a yoke, diamond shaped panels liberally stitched, encircle the coat at the breast from which two extremely wide plaits begin both in the back and front. At the shoulders and wrists the sleeves are stitched in clever designs. The deep collar has two straps with buttons, which serve to protect the throat when the collar is turned up. The two vertical pockets are finished with stitched shields. Half way the extremely full skirt is elaborated with stitched panels of the same design as those at the breast. To the clever and careful tailoring, the garment owes its perfect proportions and that indefinable something termed "style." Length 50 to 54 inches, in sizes 34 to 44.

THE limitations of the garments which the market affords, such as the false economy of fur, and its uncertain nature, gave us the incentive to design and fashion the models which our collection includes. Instead of confining them to the popular furs, we have selected many of the rare and exclusive pelts, such as Russian Pony Fur of which this garment is made. It is a serviceable and extremely attractive fur, not at all heavy in weight. The coat is a double-breasted model, the skirt of which is almost twice greater in width than the average fur coat. IN this garment the power of the tailor's craft, the furrier's cleverness and the tanner's skill have all been exhausted. It is a coat that fully answers the purpose for which a fur garment is worn, plus that element of distinctiveness and character which is ever the despair of the mediocre fur tailor. For those who would be exclusive even unto their apparel for the automobile, we commend this double-breasted box model. It is made of selected skins of the muskrat sheared quite close to the hide, which is termed "Ramo" fur. THE relative value of a fur garment is established by its power to answer the function for which it was designed, the character of the fur, and the style of the garment itself. Analyzed by this standard, the three-quarter model which is presented here, deserves a place with the garments that usually cost again as much. It is made of spotted hair seal fur much like a leopard skin, and is brilliant and lustrous even after indefinite service. The shawl collar is of natural racoon fur of a high grade. Across the shoulders and chest the garment fits rather snugly; from the waist, the skirt graduates to most generous proportions. Automobile Baskets and Cases.

TO determine the true value of a given thing its component parts should be a factor in defining its worth. That is the manner of test to which you may subject our baskets and cases and they will not be found wanting. The fittings were selected and assembled with the purpose of presenting models which are not alone attractive but extremely serviceable as well. In their arrangement economy of space was considered, so that they would be compact yet complete. Our stock affords baskets and cases of fine randed willow in buff or white, and of solid sole leather in London color, fitted with tea or luncheon service or clever combinations of them, for two, three, four or six persons. The prices range from $5.00 to $100.00. May we send to you more detailed information?
